Indian cuisine

Indian cuisine is famous for its variety of tastes and not only curry. Traditional Indian curry is combination of Masala – mix of onion, garlic, ginger and tomatoes with many seasonings and other vegetables or meat. Word Masala is also known as seasoning.

Each Indian food is different from other. Since India is large country, every state of India has different cuisine and preparation of its' meals. Cuisine of India is also well known for its' exotic sauces and many times, foreigners find that complicated. Even the north, Mughal cuisine is very different from the south. The tradition in India is to pass recipes from generation to generation.

Unique and strong flavors in Indian cuisine are caused by usage of different spices and nutritional ingredients such as leaf vegetables, pods and fruits. It's said that most of Indian seasonings have been chosen thousands of years ago because of their health effects and not according to their tastes. Many of them, for example turmeric, cloves and cardamom are antiseptical, while ginger helps with digestion.

In Indian cuisine, food is divided into five tastes – sweet, salty, seasoned, bitter and sour. Well – balanced food in Indian cuisine should include all five tastes, however, it is not always achieved. This principle explains using of many seasonings and their combinations.

Tandoori food

Tandoor is special clay oven of cylinder shape, used for cooking and baking. In India, Tandoor is known also as Bhatti and nowadays, it's important tool in Indian restaurants. Temperatures in Tandoor can reach 480 °C. It is used for preparation of many meals, such as Tandoori chicken, chicken Tikka and bread of many types, which is known as Naan.
